Writers use words in many ways to help you imagine what is happening. They use figurative language to add beauty, meaning, or force to their words. Irony is when someone says or does something that means the opposite. Situational irony is when something happens that is the exact opposite of what was expected to happen. Dramatic irony is when the audience knows something that the character does not. Verbal irony is when someone says something but means the opposite. Need alternative explanations of these concepts? Click here for another explanation of verbal irony	Practice finding irony by reading the short stories linked below and explaining the examples.  Example: Click here for Gift of the Magi by O.
